STEAM ON COMMON ROADS.—We are rather sorry to hear that the first of the new steamstages for common roads, tried at Lyons, has come to grief. The idea is a very good one, and it is a pity to have cold water thrown on the enterprise at the outset by a bad accident. And yet, perhaps, the affair, if rightly viewed, is by no means fatal to the principle. The way of it seems to have been this: The road locomotive was dragging, on its trial trip, two omnibusses, each two stories high. There were sixty persons aboard, mostly public personages, lending their official or social countenance to the experiment. The train went through various streets of Lyons at a brisk pace, crossed one or two bridges, and, after a full half hour's successful run, made some complicated manœuvres in the presence of invited guests. Then it attempted an ascent, when "some imperfections in the system appeared." But when the descent came, "the force of adherence in the machine was found insufficient." In a word, the locomotive and stages began to slide about in a lateral direction, and all control was lost over it. The whole train at length smashed up against an obstacle, but fortunately so that none of the passengers were hurt. AUCTION SALES.
